» Passive House – a solid foundation for the energy revolution

All too often, discussions about energy run more along the lines of “nuclear or coal”, thus bypassing potential sustainable solutions. The approach to today’s energy questions must instead focus “energy efficiency and renewables”. For such solutions, Passive House stands as the exemplary guiding concept.

Forty percent of Europe’s energy consumption stems from building use, by far the largest percentage coming from any one sector, and it is typically the heating that is dominating this consumption hardest. In this light, Passive House presents a reliable, sustainable solution. Passive House buildings use 90% less energy for heating than current building stock (at 165 kWh/(m²a)), meaning that the small remaining energy demand can be covered economically by a wide variety of stable and sustainable solutions: pellet heating and heat pumps that run on electricity from renewables are only two proven examples. Renewables, however, are characterised by low energy densities and thus require space, itself often precious and limited. A sustainable concept must have a strong basis: energy must be used efficiently in accordance with the latest state of knowledge. This is already economically attractive – even today, Passive House can compete with current fossil fuels market prices, an important theme for the 17th International Passive House Conference. The amount of renewable energy needed by Passive Houses is available, sustainably, from local sources.

Passive House is unique in that the “efficiency energy” it uses can be obtained everywhere. A bit of intelligence in terms of design and common sense in terms of investment is of course necessary. The need for improved products creates jobs regionally – this has been shown time and again wherever Passive House has been introduced. This both regional and economic aspect is integral to the Passive House strategy – an approach that makes the energy revolution both possible and socially sustainable.

» The Conference

The International Passive House Conference is the world’s largest gathering of Passive House experts. For first time participants, we highly suggest participation in the Passive House Basics Course, held on Wednesday, 17 April 2013. As with the 2012 Passive House Conference, which attracted over 1,000 participants from 45 countries, the 2013 framework programme promises to bring together multitudes of Passive House stakeholders from around the globe.

» Call for Papers

We invite you to submit a contribution for the 17th International Passive House Conference. Papers about completed Passive House buildings combining operational experience and innovative, affordable solutions are preferred. Please note that there is a two abstract per person maximum. All relevant information can be found at www.passivehouseconference.org. The deadline for abstract submissions is 15 October 2012

» 2013 Conference themes

- 01 Multi-storey residential buildings
- 02 Residential and non-residential EnerPHit buildings
- 03 New products and compoments: opaque building envelope, ventilation units, windows and glazings
- 04 Non-residential buildings
- 05 Historical buildings and energy efficiency
- 06 Terraced and single family houses
- 07 Retrofit details
- 08 Heating and DHW
- 09 Regional concepts
- 10 Regional tools for “Passive Houses and renewables”
- 11 Experiences in dissemination and implementation
- 12 Energy supply with renewables in Passive House neighbourhoods

A special segment of the 2013 Passive House Conference will be devoted to the regional implementation of strategies combining energy efficiency and renewables as part of the new EU funded PassREg (Passive House Regions with Renewable Energy) project.

» Exhibition

Passive House components provide maximum comfort with minimum energy costs in new builds and refurbishments alike. Whether you want insulation materials, windows or ventilation systems with heat recovery – all leading manufacturers of Passive House components will be represented at the accompanying specialist exhibition. Here you will find first-class advice, information materials, illustrative models and experts happy to answer your questions. In parallel, a lecture series will provide visitors with additional Passive House insights.
